DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Queen Anne's Building is located on the south side of Lawyers Row in Centreville, facing Court House Square.

This large brick building was probably constructed in the late 19th century, and once served as the office for the Centreville Record. Today the first floor is used as a law office by the firm of Downes and Gregory; the upper floors are being renovated.

The Queen Anne's Building is of brick construction, 2 1/2 stories high, with an imposing mansard roof. The principal entrance is located in the center bay facing Lawyers Row, with two 2/2 windows and a single door to the left and three 2/2 windows and a door to the right. There are three pairs of 2/2 windows on the second floor and three dormer windows on the third floor. The center dormer is relatively large with paired 2/2 sash and a pitched gable roof, flanked by single 2/2 dormers on each side.

The front facade is laid in very smooth machine-made brick using stretcher bond. The door and window openings have segmental lintels with decorative terra cotta tiles used as keystones and end blocks. A bold, projecting cornice crosses this facade at the base of the mansard roof. It consists of a box cornice with complex crown mold and scrolled brackets below a deep soffit. The mansard roof is covered with asphalt shingles and is capped with a second cornice. This one is less elaborate, with a shallow soffit and no brackets.

The first story of the east gable wall is concealed by the Bryan Law Office. A single 2/2 window in the north bay is the only opening on the second floor. On the third floor, there is one 1/1 window in the north bay and a paired 2/2 window in the south bay. The brickwork is laid in seven-course bond using a common grade of brick. The shed roof eave is finished with a crown mold applied to a series of molded frieze boards.

On the west gable wall, there is a single 2/2 window to left of center and a door in the south bay of the first floor. Single 2/2 windows are placed in the north and south bays on the second floor; there are no openings on the third floor. The brickwork is laid in seven-course bond using common grade brick.

7.2 DESCRIPTION

A later furnace chimney has been added against the center of this wall on the first floor. This flue corbels into the wall and evidently joins an existing chimney flue inside the wall.

A modern shed-roof addition covers the entire first floor of the rear facade. There are three 2/2 windows on both the second and the third floor. The eaves are trimmed with a simple molded frieze board.

The interior of the building has been renovated. The first floor serves as a law office, the upper floors are at present unoccupied.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Queen Anne's Building was constructed in 1873 by John W. Perry, a prominent Centreville businessman. It was known for many years as the "Perry Building" and served as a newspaper office from 1912 until 1958. It is significant for its association with John W. It is one of the largest Victorian commercial structures in Centreville and is among the earliest surviving buildings on Lawyers Row.

The Queen Anne's Building rests on a lot purchased in 1873 by John W. Perry from William T. McClyments for $426. The deed notes that the lot was intended to be sold to Perry in 1866 and grants a right of way to Perry for the use of an alley "between the Store House on the land herein excepted and the building now being erected upon the land herein conveyed".⁽¹⁾ The building passed out of the Perry family in 1909, when Ernest

8.1 STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Perry sold the lot "improved by a three story brick building known as The Perry Building" to J. Walters Russell for $3880.⁽²⁾ In 1912 Russell sold the building to three local men, co-owners of the Centreville Record. The principal owner was Edwin H. Brown, a Centreville attorney, who owned a 3/5 interest. His partners were James T. Bright and W.C. Orrell, each owners of a 1/5 interest. The price of $3800 included $1000 in cash and the balance by the assumption of a mortgage for $2800.⁽³⁾ In the ensuing 25 years, the paper seems to have periodically encountered financial difficulties, as mortgages are recorded for both the building and the mechanical equipment.⁽⁴⁾ In 1958, the merged Queen Anne's Record and Observer Publishing Company sold the Perry or Queen Anne's Building to Vachel Downes, the present owner.⁽⁵⁾ Since that time it has served primarily as a law office.
